Central Entrance

The central entrance usually remains closed. It is opened only for His Majesty the Emperor on the day of the Opening Ceremony, for Diet Members on the first convocation day after an election, and for State guests.

Central Hall

Beyond the central entrance lies the central hall, which is located directly under the central tower. The hall has a floor area of 267.65 square meters, and the cathedral-like ceiling rises four storeys that admit daylight from above, making the hall 32.62 meters high. The windows and ceiling are decorated with stained glass, and the hall contains bronze statues of Hirobumi Ito (1841–1909), Taisuke Itagaki (1837–1919), and Shigenobu Okuma (1838–1922), each of whom rendered distinguished service in the cause of parliamentary government in Japan.

Emperor's Room

Located at the top of the central staircase which leads up from the central hall, this room is used by His Majesty the Emperor when he visits the Diet. On the day of the Opening Ceremony, the presiding officer and deputy presiding officer of each House come here to meet His Majesty. The room is made entirely of Japanese cypress finished with fine lacquer and is said to be the quintessence of the architecture and craftsmanship of that era.

Entrance to the House of Representatives

The Members of the House of Representatives usually enter and exit the Diet Building via this entrance. In the hall at the top of the stairs are busts of Yukio Ozaki (1858–1954) and Takeo Miki (1907–1988) who were House Members for 50 years or more, and were awarded the title of Honorary Member of the House of Representatives for their distinguished service in the cause of constitutional government.

Attendance Board

To the left as one enters the House of Representatives is the attendance board. Members press the button below their name as they enter the building to indicate that they are present.

Red Carpet

A red carpet with a total length of about four kilometers lines the halls and staircases of the Diet Building.

Fossils

The Diet Building is also called the "Treasure House of Fossils" because many of the building's columns and other structures contain fossils.

Chamber of the House of Representatives

In this chamber, the House of Representatives holds its plenary sittings. The Speaker's chair is in the center of the dais, and the seat next to it is reserved for the Secretary General. The seats in the front row on the elevated platform on either side of the Speaker's chair are for the Cabinet Ministers. The Prime Minister's seat is in the front row on the left-hand side near the Speaker.

The Members' seats, which form a semi-circle around the rostrum in front of the Speaker's chair, are traditionally occupied, from left to right, in blocks proportionate to the strength of the political groups represented.

At each Member's seat is the Member's nameplate, a black rectangular block with the Member's name inscribed on it.

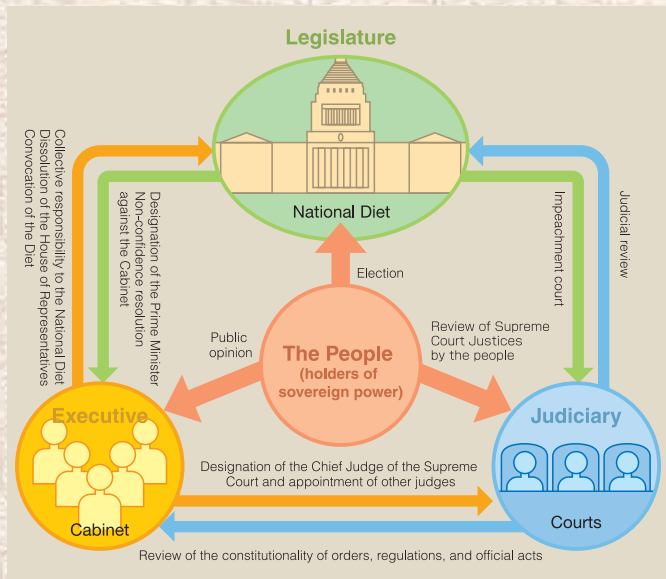

The National Diet

The Design Provided in the Constitution

The Constitution of Japan was promulgated on November 3, 1946, and went into effect on May 3, 1947. The first session of the National Diet was convened on May 20 of that year. That session marked the birth of the National Diet, replacing the Imperial Diet which had been created in 1890 under the Meiji Constitution and served for over 56 years.

Separation of Powers

The Constitution of Japan provides for the principle of the separation of powers. Three independent organs—the Diet, the Cabinet, and the Judiciary—are established, and each limits the power of the others through a system of checks and balances. This prevents the abuse of power and guarantees the rights and freedom of the people.

Status of the National Diet

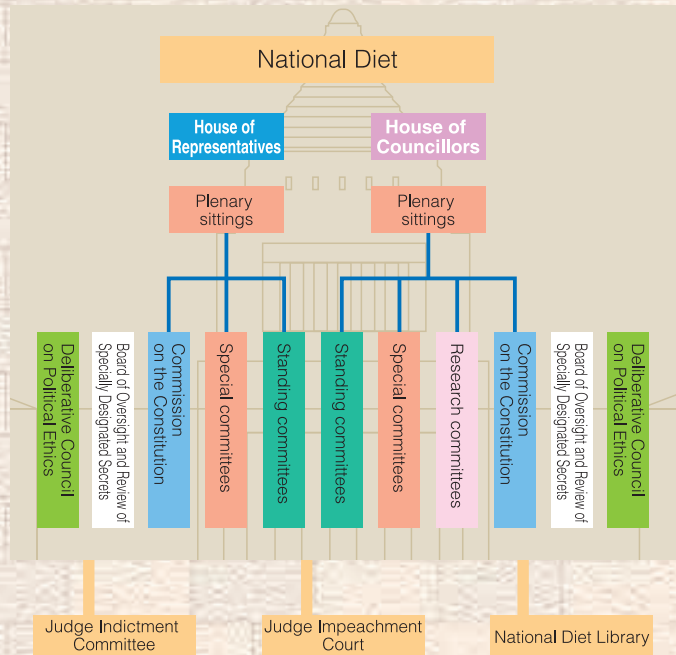

Article 41 of the Constitution of Japan provides that “The Diet shall be the highest organ of State power, and shall be the sole law-making organ of the State.”

Parliamentary Cabinet System

The Prime Minister is designated from among the Members of the Diet by a resolution of the Diet. The Cabinet is collectively responsible to the Diet in the exercise of executive power. If the House of Representatives passes a non-confidence resolution, either the House of Representatives must be dissolved or the Cabinet must resign en masse. Such a system where the Cabinet, or executive branch of government, is dependent on the support of the Diet, or legislative branch, to exist is called a parliamentary cabinet system.

Structure of the National Diet

The Diet consists of two Houses—the House of Representatives and the House of Councillors—and each House is composed of elected Members, who represent all the people. Each House has plenary sittings and committees.

Comparison of the Membership of the Two Houses

House of Representatives		House of Councillors
475	Number of members	242
4 years (Membership ends with the dissolution of the House)	Term of office	6 years (with half of the Members elected every third year)

Powers of the National Diet

Powers of the National Diet

- The House of Representatives and the House of Councillors jointly exercise the powers of the National Diet through the passage of bills and measures by both Houses. The Diet's powers include
 - (1) Enactment of laws,
 - (2) Decisions regarding the budget and other matters related to national finances,
 - (3) Decisions regarding approval for the conclusion of international treaties,
 - (4) Designation of the Prime Minister, and
 - (5) Initiation of amendments to the Constitution.
- In the case where the House of Representatives and the House of Councillors make opposite decisions regarding a legislative bill or certain other measures, the Constitution recognizes the precedence of the House of Representatives and its collective decisions over the House of Councillors under certain conditions.

Powers of Each House

- Each House independently exercises its own powers including
 - (1) Autonomy of each House,
 - Election of the House presiding officer, deputy presiding officer, and standing committee chairmen
 - Establishment of special committees as necessary for each session
 - Establishment of rules pertaining to meeting procedures and internal discipline
 - (2) Right to conduct investigations in relation to government,
 - (3) Right to accept and vote on petitions, and
- Power unique to each House
 - (1) Right of the House of Representatives to pass a non-confidence resolution against the Cabinet,
 - (2) Convocation of the House of Councillors in emergency session.

Status of National Diet Members

National Diet Members receive a mandate from the people with whom resides sovereign power, and the Diet Members bear the important responsibility of deliberating government matters as representatives of all the people. Certain protection is given to National Diet Members so that they can perform these responsibilities. Except for cases prescribed by law, Diet Members cannot be apprehended when the Diet is in session and they cannot be held responsible outside of the House for speeches, discussions, or votes made in their House.

Convocation and Term of Session

Convocation of the National Diet is decided by the Cabinet, and an Imperial Rescript is promulgated.

Type	Convocation	Term of Session
Ordinary session	Once a year, starting in January	150 days (one extension possible)
Extraordinary session	(1) When deemed necessary by the Cabinet (2) When requested by one-quarter or more of the total Members of either House (3) After a general election called due to the expiration of the term of office of the Members of the House of Representatives or after a regular election of the House of Councillors	Determined by agreement of both Houses (two extensions possible)
Special session	After a general election called after the dissolution of the House of Representatives

Opening Ceremony

The Opening Ceremony is held at the beginning of a session in the presence of His Majesty the Emperor. The Members of both Houses meet in the Chamber of the House of Councillors. At that time, the Speaker of the House of Representatives gives a ceremonial address on behalf of both Houses, and His Majesty the Emperor also delivers a message.

Plenary Sittings

Basic Principles of Plenary Sittings

Plenary sittings are meetings of all House Members, and it is here that the final will of the House is determined. Plenary sittings are open to the public in principle, and one-third or more of all Members must be present for a plenary sitting to be held. Business is decided by the agreement of a majority of Members present, except for special cases.

When the Diet is in session, the House of Representatives usually holds its plenary sittings at one o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, and the House of Councillors at ten o'clock in the morning on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

Main Business of Plenary Sittings

Business at plenary sittings is conducted in accordance with the Order of the Day which states the meeting date and time as well as the matters for discussion at that day's plenary sitting and their order.

1. Organization of the House

- Election of the presiding officer and deputy presiding officer
The election of the presiding officer and the deputy presiding officer is performed by secret ballot. The House Members write the name of the candidate they want to vote for on the ballot and submit it along with a wooden name card provided at their seat.
- Designation of seats
- Determination of the term of session or the extension of the term of session
- Selection of standing committee members and election of standing committee chairmen
- Selection of members of the Commission on the Constitution, the Board of Oversight and Review of Specially Designated Secrets, and the Deliberative Council on Political Ethics
- Establishment of special committees

2. Designation of the Prime Minister

The designation of the Prime Minister is performed by open ballot in each House. In an open ballot, Members write the name of the candidate they want to vote for on the ballot as well as their own name and submit it.

3. Speeches by Ministers of State and Question-and-Answer Session

Once the National Diet has been convened, a plenary sitting is held in each House and the House is organized. Next, the Opening Ceremony is held. Then, Ministers of State deliver speeches in a plenary sitting at each House.

In an ordinary session, the Prime Minister delivers an address on general policy, and addresses are also given by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of State in charge of economic and fiscal policy. In a special or extraordinary session, usually the Prime Minister gives a policy speech and, when necessary, other Ministers of State also give addresses. After these addresses, Members ask questions (interpellations) on behalf of their political group, and the Prime Minister and other Ministers of State respond.

4. Explanation of Bills and Question-and-Answer Session

In the case of important bills and measures, when the Committee on Rules and Administration deems it particularly necessary, the Members who submitted the bill, if the bill was submitted by House Members—or the Minister of State in question, if the bill was submitted by the Cabinet—explain the purpose of the bill. Questions are then fielded about the bill or measure.

5. Deliberation of Bills

Bills (legislative bills, budgets, international treaties, etc.) for which committee deliberations have been completed are submitted to the plenary sitting. At the plenary sitting, the chairman of the committee that examined the bill gives, after the declaration of the agenda item, a report on the process and results of the committee deliberations. A vote, at times after questions and discussion, is then taken.

There are three methods of voting: oral (asking aloud whether there are any objections), standing (those in favor of the bill are asked to stand), and open ballot (voting where the voter's name is indicated). In the House of Councillors, voting is usually conducted using a push-button system.

Open ballot

An open ballot is used for the national budget and other important bills. Members vote using one of the wooden name tablets provided at their seat. A white wooden name tablet is cast to indicate approval of the bill in question, and a green wooden name tablet is cast to indicate opposition.

Types of Committees

There are two types of committees: standing committees, which are permanent bodies, and special committees, which are established by House resolution when deemed necessary by that House for a given Diet session. Every Diet Member serves on at least one standing committee during his or her term of office.

Standing Committees

The House of Representatives and the House of Councillors each have seventeen standing committees.

Committees

Commission on the Constitution

Each House has set up a Commission on the Constitution to conduct broad and comprehensive research on the Constitution of Japan and basic legislation closely related to it, and to consider constitutional amendment bills, procedure bills and related matters.

The commission of the House of Representatives has a membership of 50 and the House of Councillors 45.

Board of Oversight and Review of Specially Designated Secrets

Each House set up a Board of Oversight and Review of Specially Designated Secrets to investigate and constantly oversee the system operation for protecting specially designated secrets in the defense and foreign affairs information, whose leakage has the potential to significantly harm the security of Japan and needs to be specially designated to be kept secret; as well as to review judgments including those by administrative organs' heads as to the propriety of their response to requests of each House committee or other organization for the submission of the specially designated secrets.

The boards of both Houses have the same membership of 8.

Deliberative Council on Political Ethics

A Deliberative Council on Political Ethics has been set up in each House to establish political ethics. The council of the House of Representatives has a membership of 25 and the House of Councillors 15.

Committees on Fundamental National Policies

The Committee on Fundamental National Policies is responsible for deliberating basic government policy. It normally meets jointly with the House of Councillors committee of the same name, and functions as a venue for debate between the Prime Minister and opposition party leaders on fundamental national policies and other important topics.

Committee on Budget of the House of Representatives

This committee is mandated to examine the budget for national revenues and expenditures, but members ask questions about a wide range of issues related to government, including issues of concern to the people. Committee deliberations on the national budget commence with a briefing on the budget submitted and include basic questions, general questions, hearings, subcommittee meetings (in the case of the Committee on Budget of the House of Councillors: commissioned research), and closing questions. After the deliberations have been completed, the budget is voted on.

Committee on Rules and Administration of the House of Representatives

This committee decides the plenary sitting dates, order of business, speakers, and speaking time allocation, as well as other matters related to the administration of the House. The committee also discusses matters related to the Diet Law and various House rules and handles matters about which advice is sought by the House Speaker.

Deliberation of Bills

No business may be transacted in a committee unless at least one-half of its members are present. All business is decided by majority vote of the members present. Members of the media and others may attend meetings as observers with the permission of the Legislation can be submitted by Diet Members or by the Cabinet, but only the Cabinet can submit the national budget or a treaty. For Members to submit a legislative bill, the bill must have the support of 20 or more Members of the House of Representatives (in the case of the House of Councillors: 10 or more Members). Legislative bills requiring budget, however, need the support of 50 or more Members of the House of Representatives (in the case of the House of Councillors: 20 or more Members).

Once a bill has been submitted, the presiding officer of the House refers the bill to the committee under whose jurisdiction the bill falls. After receiving a briefing on the bill from the Members who submitted the bill or the Minister of State in charge, the committee members ask questions of the Diet Members who submitted the bill, the Minister of State, or other government officials in a question-and-answer session.

After questions have been fielded, the political parties and groups express their position on the bill in a debate. Then a vote is taken. Votes at committees are taken by asking those in favor of the bill to stand.

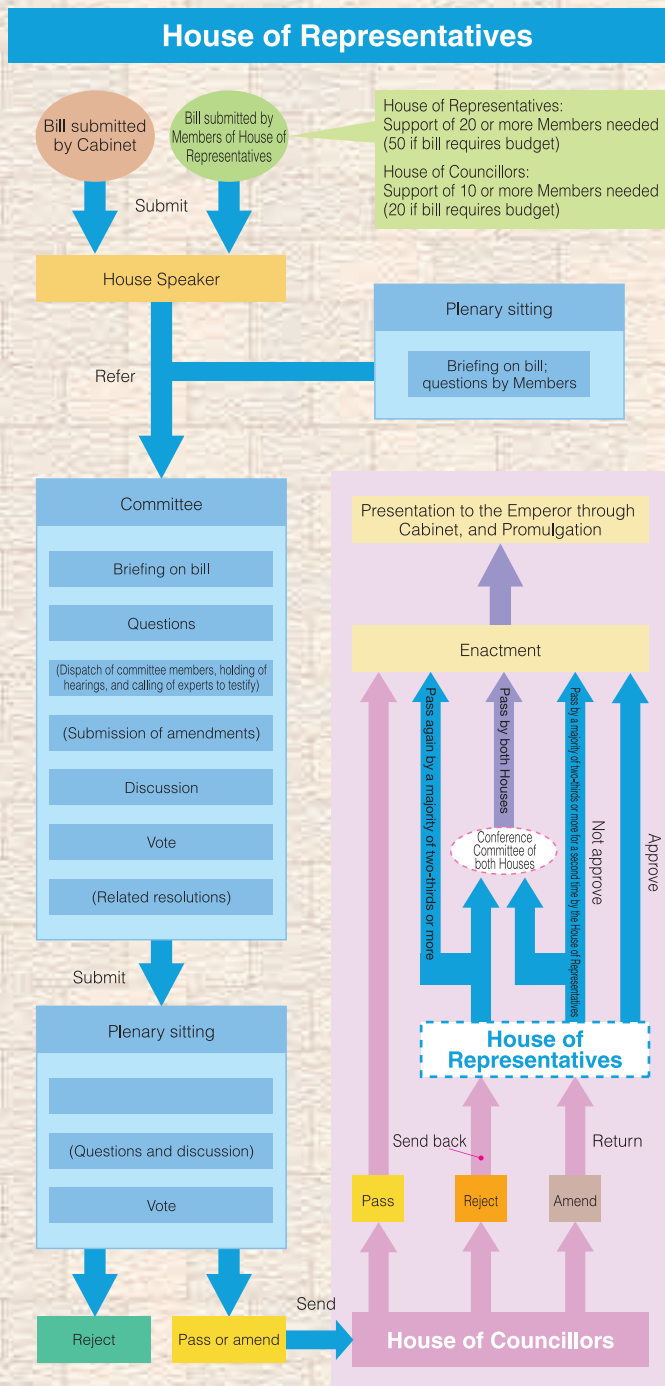

Vote by standing

Investigation in relation to Government

To create legislation and check government, each House can conduct investigations in relation to government. Such investigations are conducted by the various committees set up in each House. Standing committees decide the matters within their jurisdiction that they will investigate for a given Diet session and receive the approval of the presiding officer of the House before commencing their investigations. Special committees investigate matters that are referred to them.

Deliberations when the Diet Is Not in Session

The National Diet does not meet after the term of session ends. The House standing and special committees, however, can continue their deliberations even when the Diet is not in session provided the House has so decided. With House approval, the committees can pursue their investigations and discussions; they can perform such activities as the holding of meetings and the dispatch of committee members to conduct research.
